Family and Consumer Sciences Education

Sarah Altman Belcher (2011 BS)

- What is the best part of being an FCS ED major at Ohio State?
The best part is all the different classes you get to take as part of the major. I got to take HDFS (Human Development and Family Sciences) classes, foods classes, personal finance classes, and education classes! Every class in the major was interesting and fun for me so it made my time at OSU go by way too fast.
- How did LFCSE (Leaders in Family and Consumer Sciences Education) contribute to your experience at Ohio State?
The student organization, LFCSE, provided interesting opportunities to learn even more about being an FCS teacher as well as allowing time for fun with friends in the program. It was a fantastic group!
- What was your experience in getting a FCS teaching position after graduating from Ohio State?
It was pretty nerve wracking trying to get an FCS teaching position in the Columbus area. However, due to my experiences and instruction at Ohio State, I was more than prepared to face searching and interviewing.
- What do you teach in Family and Consumer Science?
I currently teach Healthy Living, which is the healthy foods and cooking class my school offers. I teach for ECOT, which is the largest online K-12 school in the United States!
- Describe what you think is the most compelling aspect of being a FCS teacher.
Being an online FCS teacher, I get the chance to reach many more students each year in a much different way than in a traditional school. I get to utilize technology every single day to make my FCS lessons come to life for my students, as well as to help build their 21st-century skills.
